

“Developing Effective Transcultural Interactions in your Global Team/Network”

-Intercultural Communication Workshop for International Doctoral Students-

This training is for anybody who needs to interact with people from cultures different from their own. From people attending meetings with international delegates or staff, who work in an international environment, to new comers to Bonn university who are expected to perform tasks with colleagues, co-researchers or participate in conference or exchange programs.

Objective and outline

When people from different cultural backgrounds come into contact with others, effective communication may be hard to achieve. It may not be easy to make assumptions when dealing with cultures as every culture has its own rules, values, norms, and ways of communicating verbally and non-verbally. As a result, without intercultural competence, misunderstanding, conflict and frustration may occur and break communication down. Hence, developing intercultural communication competence is of crucial importance to overcome barriers to effective interactions. Intercultural communication competence passport allows communicators to:

- Increase productivity
- Better teamwork and cooperation
- Minimise the risk of cultural shock
- Dare to take part in group works with positivity
- Raise awareness of equality and diversity
- Communicate with a large number of people
- develop international business networking
